DRUMMING BABEST

WELCOME TO OUR first issue of Babesta Beat. It's a catalog-slash-magazine on the world of a cool city child. Read it, enjoy it, shop it. One thing to note though, at Babesta some of the fashions are in and out of the store like wildfire, so you have to be fast. But we promise as soon as a fresh style goes out another one comes in, so you're never lacking for cool threads.

This, like many things we've done, was conceptualized on the fly, and then we got excited about it and knew we had to see it through. We were lucky enough to work with a host of amazing creative powerhouses, including photographer Katrina Tang, stylist Michel Onofrio, and make up artist Laura Castellano.

On top of that, the whole Babesta team pitched in like crazy with creative ideas and lots of legwork. In the end, we hope you like it. Our fashion editorial, "Mimi & the Magic Forest," was shot in the Berkshires on an on-and-off rainy day in the beautiful town of South Egremont. The kids became the characters of our little story and we transformed a forest into a magical wonderland brimming with the latest children's furniture, toys, fashion and gear.

This fall will be a very exciting time at Babesta. We love the back-to-school season, followed by the fun of the holidays. Keep a look out for our ever-evolving blog and follow us on our social media channels, including Facebook, Twitter, Pinterest and You Tube.

See ya in the shop!

Tokidoki for Clek collection, (top to bottom) 16497, 15310, 15308, $549.99, $129.99, $349.99.

BOOSTED! Tokidoki amps up the car seat scene

It seems like gibberish, words like Foonf, Oobr and Olli–but anyone in the know in the car seat scene will recognize these as well made, stylish boosters and convertible car seats. And they just got more-so. "The Tokidoki for Clek partnership is a natural way to expand upon our design DNA," says Jenn Lumley, co-owner of Clek. The graffiti inspired illustrations of Simone Legno add a dose of urban cool to the already sleek seats, making them the envy of day trippers both young and old.

TAG, YOU'RE IT

Graffiti art at the Museum

The robust art collection of street artist Martin Wong (1946-1999) debuts at the Museum of the City of New York this spring. The exhibition, City as Canvas, will run from February through July 27th. Wong, who was a noted East Village artist, had amassed a collection of his contemporaries' work in the 70s and 80s, including art by Keith Haring, Lee Quiñones, Jean-Michel Basquiat, Lady Pink, Futura 2000 and more. His collection, as well as Wong's own work, much of which has never been seen, will be on display at this encyclopedic exhibit of street art styles and techniques. The show is a celebration of urban self-expressionism, housed in the lovely and bite-sized Museum of the City of New York, strategically located right next to Central Park at 103rd. Runs February 4–July 27, 2014.

FLY RIDE BabyZen's Yoyo stroller hits the skies!

Let's face it, hitting the airport with baby in tow is no walk in the park. Enter the BabyZen Yoyo stroller to change all that. The lightweight ride folds down to airport carry-on size, so there are no more gate checks needed! That means no muss, no fuss when you get to your destination. So don't let baby prevent you from catching the travel bug. New places are best enjoyed with a pair of fresh eyes at your side. Available for pre-order at Babesta. Come & take it for a spin!

Happy face lamp 16779, $250.

LICENSED TO GLIDE

Monte's newest glider is definitely one to sink into. Dubbed the Como, the chair takes the craftsmanship and quality of the bestselling Grano and Luca gliders and ups the ante in plushness. "The first thing you will notice," says Ralph Montemurro, co-owner of Monte Design Group, "is that by making this model with a loose back and seat, it is a very soft chair to sit in. You will sink into this chair more than any of our other models." The glider features two fabric colors, sand and pebble gray, each offered with a solid walnut base. There's even a Missoni lumbar pillow option for some added luxe.

HAPPY HAPPY JOY JOY Mr. Maria's lastest lamp makes us smile

The newest light in the Mr. Maria series (the company that gave us those incredibly cute Miffy lights) is the classic happy face in sunshine yellow. The oversized iconic smile lights up a room all the while making a bold style statement. We can see it coupled with a sleek modern crib and some retro vintage posters framed on the wall. Cheers to the original emoticon!

OH BABY Cybex Aton 2 in new colors for sprin

The Cybex Aton 2 gets a wash of color this spring, giving an extra pop to one of Babesta's favorite infant car seats, with new colors like ocean, storm cloud, charcoal, strawberry and our personal favorite "lollipop." Color though isn't the only thing that's changing for car seats. Infant car seats are the talk of Washington these days, with proposals in the works to strengthen child safety seat guidelines. The National Highway Traffic Safety Administration is proposing a first-ever side impact test, and a reduction of the current weight limit guidelines for the LATCH system for child safety seats. Rest assured, we, and all of the car seat companies we work with, are staying abreast of all changes to make sure that we are always providing the best options for the families we serve!

OLD SCHOOL RIDE

Bugaboo gets nostalgic with the new special edition Cameleon Classic

This spring, Bugaboo launches the Cameleon 3 Classic Complete stroller, a nod to the original Frog pram that paved the way for the company's success. The Cameleon Classic features a monochrome colorway and a quilted canopy interior. The single fabric color eschews the mix and match customization for which Bugaboo has more recently been known, though any time you want to strut your stuff with a contrasting shade, new canopies can be purchased separately. Personally, we're head over wheels for the olive color, one of the best new neutrals for girls or boys. Bugaboo Cameleon 3 Classic Complete stroller, 16706, 16707, $1049.

CATCH THOSE Zs Oilo's latest designs will have you sleeping like a baby in style.

Your little one has a sophisticated style, yes? If so, the bedding of choice is Oilo, a company known for its bold graphic prints and cool colors. An interior designer's dream, the newest collection, dubbed Zara, features gender neutral gray that is soothing and fresh, and can be dialed up with some key bold colored accessories. Organic and original, pieces in the collection, including the fitted sheets, blankets, bumpers, crib skirts, pillows and changing pad toppers, can be mixed and matched to interior perfection. $39.$170.

CARDED Babesta-fied cards!

There are few things you can be sure of, but here are a couple: birthdays & babies. They both keep coming—via friend, via family and via neighbors. Babesta has designed a small series of our own cards to match each occasion, hand illustrated and inscribed with "Don't worry the city doesn't sleep anyway," "B-Boy" and "B-Girl." $3 each.

A TO XENIA Xenia Joost releases her spring collection

Estonian fashion designer Xenia Joost hits the shop this season with her signature harem pants and some poppy spring dresses! Joost began her design career in womenswear at the coveted house of Vivienne Westwood, and later carved out her own piece of the market, starting an eponymous brand for women. Just a couple seasons ago, she sized down for kids, and found an early U.S. home at Babesta. Joost says the line is based upon a mini-me concept, earmarked by style, comfort and fun.

THE BAD BOY

OF FASHION

Project Runway winner and designer behind kids' fashion line La Miniatura, Jeffrey Sebelia dishes about his über cool kids' line.

IRST QUESTION (IT'S on all of our minds!): Given that you and Heidi Klum both have kids' lines, what are the chances of an upcoming Project Runway Kids show?" He shakes his head and laughs. "She'll have to really step up her game before that happens." That's Jeffrey -the bad boy instigator who had us glued to Project Runway (Season 3) and most recently, Project Runway All Stars.

"What would be fun," he continues, "is if the kids worked with professional seamstresses, and you could tap into their minds for design, but a seamstress sewed the garments."

Now on his fifth season in kids' fashion. Sebelia admits that it surprised him how much he connected with childrenswear. "As a designer, of course I love womenswear. I also love menswear and making things that I like for myself," he says. Although initially rebuffing the idea of childrenswear, he found he was compelled by the challenge of it. "I love creating something that's both exciting and appropriate, elevated without being too sophisticated."

His rebellious streak is in the DNA of the children's fashion brand. As Sebelia tells it, he had been working as a creative director of a women's fashion company, when friends approached him (their son was the same age as his) and asked if he'd be interested in collaborating on a high end boys' line. He jumped in, designed the line, called in sick at his job, and went to market. "The response was polarized," Sebelia admits, as his shrunken suit jacket silhouettes and the bright colored skinny jeans were very different from what had been hanging on the racks for boys before. People loved it or didn't get it.

Despite its love-it-or-not beginning, La Miniatura has gained a strong foothold in the cool kids' market - and certainly seems to have Hollywood smitten. Travis Barker was the first customer and the brand has been spotted on the Jolie-Pitt kids and Mason Disick (Kardashian) to name a few. Sebelia chalks this up to the creative mindset. "They are actors, creatives, out there looking to be interested. I'm grateful that these families have chosen La Miniatura fashions."

No doubt we will see this season on the pages of People, as the strong florals and graphics are cool, comfy and chic, hitting the high points for kids and parents alike. Sebelia says the spring-summer 2014 line was inspired by Saigon, where parts of the line are made. "I was in my hotel room looking over the city and was struck by the colors. I incorporated the rich brights (turquoise, red) and pastels (pink, peach), and used fabrics that call back to the beautiful Asian city."

His most recent stint on Project Runway All Stars helped to expose the brand to a greater audience, which he hopes will build the brand further. So if you weren't tuned in already, it's time to watch, as Jeffrey goes back to the mannequin and experiments with fresh fabrications and techniques to keep our kids in cutting-edge style, not afraid to break some rules along the way.

Adventure Time

BUGABOO'S NEWEST ADDITION to the menagerie is the Buffalo, a rugged stroller that works well both navigating city streets and country roads. The all-terrain stroller's tires are robust and chassis is strong enough to handle even the most overstuffed diaper bag, while the large underseat basket has caught many city folks' eyes, as on-the-go storage is at a premium. The two wheel position for sand and snow make the stroller a cinch to navigate if you're beach-bound (there's also an extendable sun canopy) or have a Chilean ski trip planned this summer. Use Bugaboo's travel bag if you check the stroller at the airport, to ensure it's ready for the sand, slopes or streets on the other side!

Dr. Alisa Baer (a.k.a. The Car Seat Lady) chats about choosing the perfect car seat and gives her top do's and don'ts for safely traveling in cabs.

HOOSING A CAR seat doesn't have to be like shaking a Magic 8 ball (maybe so, maybe no): There is a science to it. Guiding factors include the age, height and weight of each child, how many kids you have, your lifestyle and type of car you are most likely traveling in. Luckily most seats work with most models, but some work better or worse depending on your vehicle and the backseat configuration. "It's like a puzzle," says Dr. Alisa Baer, dubbed "The Car Seat Lady." With thousands of car seat installations under her belt, she has created magic formulas of seats countless times.

Clek Foonf booster seat, 16697, $450.

There are a few things that you can look for or consider when making your purchase to ensure a good choice, including how long it remains rear-facing (the longer the better: The American Academy of Pediatrics recommends at least two years) and how secure the seatbelt installation is. Even if you picked a great seat, proper installation is key. "What's shocking," says Baer, "is that an overwhelming number of car seats are not installed correctly." Baer notes, "If you're not sure how to do it, you can go to seatcheck.org or safekids.org and find a certified installer in your area." In fact, considering the misuse rates, she'd recommend it.

Living in the city can add extra complication to the car seat question. "Although it's legal to travel in the city in a cab without a car seat," says Baer, "this doesn't mean it's safe." The best solution depends on the baby's age and stage she says. Infant travel systems are easy, as most strollers are compatible with most major car seats using a car seat adapter. However, when the child is a toddler, travel by cab gets much harder: The car seats are generally large, heavy and more difficult to transport. Most strollers cannot be used with the larger convertible seats, and therefore, if you did tow one along, you'd need some way to carry it when you leave the cab. As a result, many city parents feel stuck or improvise. "I've heard of parents who hold their toddlers on their laps in cabs, buckling themselves in and holding the child; those who put their kids in baby carriers and then strap themselves in the seat; and others who double buckle both parties in using one seat belt. These are not solutions," Baer implores. "No one, not even the strongest human being (or carrier strap) can keep hold of a child in an accident. The G-forces at play just don't allow for it," she says.

As kids get older, thankfully, getting around gets easier, as instead of the protective car seat, they transition to a booster designed to help position the seatbelt straps. The relatively diminutive seats are easy to carry around. "There are some with carry straps and others that are even inflatable," she notes.

To find what's right for you, Baer says, evaluate your car, child and lifestyle. You may opt for a permanent solution in the car and another set of assists for taxi cabs and travel. So go ahead and explore! With a few easy solutions, there's no reason why you can't hop over to a museum or get out of dodge. Magic 8 ball says, "Safe and happy travels ahead."

SOLUTIONS FOR ON-THE-GO AND AROUND TOWN CITY TRAVEL

INFANTS: This is easy! Just use your preferred infant car seat, like the Cybex Aton 2, on your stroller with your car seat adapters. Install the seat in the taxi or car using the LATCH system or seatbelt and place your stroller frame in the trunk.

TODDLERS: Use your preferred convertible car seat and install it using either the LATCH system or seat belt. When you get to your destination, use a car seat traveler like the Go go Babyz Traveller System, so you can wheel the seat and your child can walk or ride sitting in the seat.

KIDS: Grab your booster seat like the Clek Olli and install it using the LATCH system for the most secure ride. If you're short on space, try the BubbleBum inflatable car seat, a nice on-the-go alternative.

WHEN IN DOUBT: Take the subway and a lightweight stroller! It's fast, easy and a safe way to travel.

booster seat,

Sensibility, safety and style come together with Clek's convertible car seat and boosters.

"Not ALL SEATS are created equally," says Jennifer Lumley, co-owner of car seat and booster company Clek. She and her husband Chris have been committed to designing and manufacturing car seats since 2005 when they took over the business. Prior, Chris had worked for a large automotive supplies manufacturer, that had charged him with the task of designing a booster seat at the behest of a safety organization at a time where usage was at about 20 percent. "Over the course of 3 years, Clek launched several booster seats (Olli, Ozzi and Oobr)," Lumley notes. Those were followed up with a tech-geek's dream convertible car seat, the Foonf which features the REACT safety system, mimicking the crumple zones found in cars, energy absorbing foam layers and an automotive-style headrest for side-impact protection. Addressing the rampant misuse rate of car seats, Lumley says, all of their seats are built on a rigid LATCH system for all forward installations—in fact, the backless booster, Olli, is the only of its kind that features this, giving increased stability to the seat. Whether you're an engineer or a design-fiend (and/or a parent), the consensus is in: These seats are sweet!

For those about to rock

What you need to know when choosing your next glider, rocker or recliner.

LUCA GLIDER

Monte's original chair, timeless with a soothing back and forth motion. Micro suede and leather fabric options, and a lumbar pillow for support. 8114, $995.

The debate goes on: to rock, glide, or recline?

TODAY'S ROCKERS AREN'T your grandmother's rockers. They're sleek, modern and can work as easily in nurseries as they can in living rooms. And gliders, once large, clunky eye sores, are now high style contemporary nursery-musts, available in tweed, micro suede and leather—some even go so far as to kick back and recline.

Choosing between a host of good options may make decision-making even harder of course. Tribeca Pregnancy and Parenting Education Director Erica Lyons confirms, "There's no real difference for soothing a child," when choosing between a glider and rocker. But for families with toddlers, she adds, gliders have an added benefit: "Gliders don't rock on little hands—but as long as mom is aware of no little fingers under the rocking chair, either is fine."

Ralph Montemurro, co-owner of Monte Design Group, a family owned Canadian company founded on the concept of locally manufactured chic chairs, gives his own take. "A glider is great because it is a quiet, stable option that looks great in any room—and the glider-recliner gives you that and the ability to put your feet up and lay back. A rocker, on the other hand, is a classic choice because of its timeless style and design, and, with no moving parts, can last generations."

Montemurro says he and his wife Michelle started Monte Design after successfully identifying a void in the market, and notes, designing a better nursery chair wasn't easy. In fact, they made 40-50 prototypes of the original Luca glider (named after their third child) before going to market. Since then, they've been manufacturing gliders and rockers in Canada, without seeing a trend in preference between gliding and rocking. It seems in the end, it comes down to personal preference and aesthetic taste. So, what do you say? Are you going to rock or glide?

Whatever you choose, we salute you.

SOME QUESTIONS TO ASK AFTER YOU'VE DECIDED TO ROCK OR GLIDE Is it easy to clean? Is it comfortable? Does it fit in with my decor?

Is it easy to get out of (not too low)? Where is it made? How is it made?

Uprise Art ups the ante on kids' interiors

"ORIGINAL ART CREATES a completely different feeling than decorative posters and prints," says Tze Chun, founder of Uprise Art, an online gallery aimed at making art collecting easier, more accessible and more affordable. Her start up, that landed her plum mentions in Marie Claire, Daily Candy and Huffington Post, helps connect collectors with the perfect artwork for their homes and offices and allows them to live with the pieces, while paying in monthly installments. Having been raised in an artistic family, Chun knows the magic art in the home can bring to a child. "No matter what their interests and paths will be later in life, the ability to take a creative approach or think abstractly is important," she says.

the last Affordable Art Fair in Manhattan, Chun notes, a seven year old girl who was given a budget to pick out art of her choice carefully selected a work by Rebeca Raney at the Uprise Art booth-it seems the quirky characters, flora and fauna from the artist's imaginary world "Raneytown" proved irresistible. Other artists that Chun attests work as well in a child's environment as they do in a living room: Erin O'Keefe and Evan Venegas. For kids, living with art fosters appreciation. "In a world of iPads and computer screens, it's important for kids to see the craft and technique of original art, and how things can be OOKING BACK, YOU could say the creation of Spot On Square was a long time in the making, even before we knew it ourselves," says Nicole Springer, co-owner of the modern furniture company. She and her husband Bob started the company seven years ago, after succumbing to the entrepreneurial call. "Our usual dreamy comments of 'Someday, it would be cool to do...' turned into 'What if we...' and soon the opportunity became obvious to us and we jumped in with both feet." Bob, an industrial designer, had a love of modern furniture design from a young age, and would often design and hand build many pieces for their home. Nicole, formerly a teacher, put to use her organizational and planning skills to handle the business end. "At the time, as we looked at it, there was very little available that was both eco-friendly with a true modern aesthetic," Nicole adds. Today, she says, their vision is greater than when they started. "We are so thankful to have enjoyed steady growth as a company and expect to continue growing in ways we couldn't have initially imagined," she adds. With the new Alto collection soon to launch and a spate of adult furniture (credenzas, queen sized beds), Spot on Square is certainly growing up.

The new Alto Collection uses architectural, translucent panels with natural materials, providing a crisp, modern look with a pop of color.

WHEN ASKED ABOUT her coolest dream on a Nook mattress, Jamie Boyakin, sales and business development director of Nook Sleep Systems, recalls a recent one she had after talking about the solar system with her daughter. "I dreamed we visited all of the planets while on vacation. It was like I was on a cruise but in space," she says. Nook's crib and twin mattresses have made a splash on the nursery scene, for their organic nature and style. Made of breathable natural latex, they use materials like wool (a natural fire retardant), eucalyptus (gentle on baby's skin) and organic cotton. The asymmetrical design is signature, but it's not all about aesthetics. The "pebbles" help air flow on the surface of the mattress. The question of organic, Boyakin says, relates to breath-ability. "Babies and kids breathe in five times more chemicals, dust and fire retardants than adults do," she notes, a compelling reason Nook strives to be as pure as possible. "When natural is best, there's no reason to use synthetics," she says. And, to boot, with Nook's Pebble mattresses, you might just get cool dreams.

Bon Voyage (id & Coe founder Zoie Kingsbery Coe talks travel

T'S A TALE any family that's traveled abroad can appreciate. A confining hotel room, no common space to let loose in and the prospect of heavy restaurant food for every meal. On a twoweek trip to Sydney, Zoie Kingsbery Coe decided her family's travel plans were not going to work, and immediately started researching local rental home options. A week in, after visiting countless "family friendly homes" she found the perfect pad and, she says, it not only was trip changing, but life changing. "Everything opened up. As soon as we were situated it felt that all of Sydney was our Sydney-we had a base to find local fresh grocers, nearby playgrounds, farmers' markets and cafés. From that experience, I realized that staying in a house as a family was the way to go," Kingsbery Coe savs.

Formerly the business manager for her husband, DJ Sasha, a sought after force in the club scene, the entrepreneur was used to the complicated logistics and global business dealings required to launch her start up, Kid & Coe (kidandcoe.com), a family friendly luxury home rental service. Her goal, she says, is to do for others what she did on that trip for herself, rendering travel easier and more enjoyable for families. "Our last trip was to Ibiza," she notes, "and we hope to explore Kid & Coe's Jamaica property in the spring." Her children, now six and two, are eager to visit foreign lands. "Our six-year-old really enjoyed Sydney because it's so fantastic for children—it's got so many zoos, aquariums, parks and beaches to explore. The two-year-old doesn't really know," Kingsbery Coe laughs. "She loves going to Yiayia's house down the street as much as anything."

We got a few minutes with the busy entrepreneur to find out a little more about her jet-setting journey.

Why is traveling so important to you? Raising our kids to understand the world beyond them is really important to us. Travel is essential for making that a reality and opening their eyes to different cultures.

It's got to be fun vetting these properties! How do you find evaluate them? We evaluate all the properties individuallyand the most important thing is that they're family-friendly. Some are particularly great for babies and toddlers, others work better for older kids—it's all a case of looking at the property carefully and its location and considering how it would work for a visiting family. To date, we've been approached by the hosts-150+ of them-to represent them on the website, which is really gratifying, and we're always looking for more. It's such a neat way [for hosts] to make money while they're away from home. We're looking for more properties in New York at the moment. We have particularly high demand in a lot of our urban areas-New York City, Paris, San Francisco -but it's really great to have the diversity of vacation homes in Washington state and Patagonia too.

Do you have any stand-out travel memories from when you were a child? My mom was a flight attendant so we were constantly hopping on planes, pretty spontaneously, accompanying her on work trips if she was going somewhere exciting. After visiting Milan and exploring Paris when I was a pre-teen I remember thinking that, coming from Georgia, I'd want to live in cities like those one day. Travel shaped who I am today.

What are some of the most surprising local insights you've compiled? We've asked every host to supply us with insights into their local areas, anything from the best kid-friendly cafe nearby to the best park to play in. Our favorites are the more obscure places-the quirky kids' boutique selling mini rock band t-shirts and the upmarket restaurants that have a kids' menu too. You need a local to point these things out otherwise you might not dare to venture

Do you have any favorite destinations for us? Depends what you are looking for. For the adventure seeker, Iceland; for the culture tracker, Amsterdam and Paris; for the beach goer, Mexico and Jamaica; and for the mountaineer, the Swiss Alps and Utah.

THEY'VE DONE IT all: from Louis Vuitton suitcases and Bottega Veneta carry-ons to a water barrel from a 19th century ship. It seems anything is fair game to get a musical makeover. Yes, even a vintage A-Team lunchbox and a Fisher-Price pull along toy.

Dominic and JP Odbert created their California based company BoomCase to bring back the nostalgic boombox with a twist. Most are built into upcycled suitcases of various sizes and shapes, matching portability with the throwback design. "We built our first BoomCase because all the boomboxes you could buy at the time needed 12 D batteries to work (which had to be replaced frequently), and were not very loud," says Odbert. "BoomCases work with any audio device you can think of–laptop, ipod, tv–the batteries and amplifiers are built in. You just plug in your music and are jamming for 18 hours on a charge. We also have Bluetooth wireless play," he adds.

Prior to starting the company, the two music and fine art majors had been building mobile speaker systems for floats and parades. A few years ago, they decided to take that concept of mobile music to their inner circle of friends, and posted some pictures of their carryall creations online. With the virality of a campy youtube video, the cool cases blew up, scoring some plum media mentions, starting with Engadget and Rolling Stone. Nostalgia, great style and adaptability to musical consumption made for a winning trifecta.

Although Odbert says tunes by Smokey Robinson are on the soundtrack of his childhood, now, he notes, no BoomCase should be without tracks by indie bands like Falcons, Hippie Sabotage and Flight Facilities. Great design and great tunes are what it's all about, so whatever your acoustic attaché, let the music play. After all, Odbert says, "Music is life."
