Program Objectives:

In today's globalized corporations, managing foreign currency has become a prerequisite for success in the finance world. Foreign currency management is one of the most difficult and least understood jobs in finance. This course is aimed at developing effective thinking and economic skills with an international emphasis.

Students will learn the economics at play when companies buy and sell in multiple currencies in a global market. Sections will discuss fundamentals of trading in international financial markets including stock, commodity, and foreign currency trading. Using real world examples and case studies, students will discuss business practices and how successful tactics can be applied in multiple situations.

International Finance Course

Following are the sections of study provided in the International Finance Course. Depending on scheduling and availability, select courses may include guest speakers. One field trip to a financial center will be included to aid in the discussions.
