Foreword

Beverages, in one form or another, have played a goodly part in the daily life of a large percentage of the human race from the days of the Pharaohs. Man began with a species of wine, later he added spirituous liquors, and yet later discovered that by the intelligent blending of one liquor with others the product resulted in a beverage more pleasing to the palate.

Thus, step by step, was handed down to mankind so-called "mixed drinks". Slowly these have been evolved into what is now known as "Cocktails", by all odds the favorite, and decidedly the most fashionable beverage of all times. Among other popular mixed beverages, each of which has its quota of devotees, are the highball, fizz, rickey, julep, cobbler, punch and many others.

The policy of the publisher has been, not to pick and choose from among the many recipes emanating from sections throughout the world, but to place before the public all available recipes so that they might choose that which most appeals to them.

All recipes in this work, with such few exceptions as are noted, have been figured for the preparation of one drink. By this standardization of recipes the home mixer will be greatly aided in the serving of any number of guests, as it is but a simple problem to multiply each ingredient by the total number of those wishing to partake.

The home mixer should bear in mind a few general hints necessary to the proper preparation of beverages.

Measurements should be exact and close attention paid to the ingredients called for in the recipes. Other ingredients may produce a wonderful beverage, but they will not produce that called for in the recipe.

Implements for measuring, used herein, are: jigger—two ounces; pony—one ounce; spoon—a bar spoon holding about one-half teaspoon.

A spoon of dry ingredient, such as sugar, should be level, not rounded.

Sugar syrup is called for in most recipes. This is for the convenience of the mixer, but dry sugar, spoon for spoon, may be substituted, if wished. Sugar syrup is prepared as follows:

Stir 4 pounds of cane sugar into 1 quart of boiling water and allow to boil for a few minutes. Remove from stove, add enough hot water to make two quarts and bottle for use.

In many recipes lime juice is specified, while in others, lemon. This is in accordance with the original recipe, but lemon may be used in either case, with substantially the same result. Never, however, use lime peel, as it has a decidedly acrid flavor and is very distasteful to many.

When preparing lemon or orange peel, cut it as thin as possible. Unless called for in recipe, do not place it in the beverage—merely twist over.

Ice, for cooling or chilling beverages, is used in three forms, viz.: shaved—cut from a block with an ice shaver; cracked—rolled in a towel and crushed into half-inch lumps with a mallet or potato masher; lump—the size made in an electric refrigerator, or slightly larger.

For shaking, two or three lumps are used in the shaker; for stirring, a half glass of cracked ice is preferable. Shaved ice is used in preparing frappes (freezes), juleps, etc., and after-dinner liqueurs. It is also used in the preparation of absinthe beverages, which should be very cold.

When shaking or stirring cocktails, highballs, etc., do so vigorously, so as not to mix too much water with them. Shaking or stirring is solely for the purpose of thoroughly mixing and chilling the beverage, not diluting it. The recipes are figured at the correct strength and any appreciable quantity of water will render them weak and insipid.

Keep in mind that gentlemen, as a general rule, prefer their beverages dry, or of the less sweet variety. Such cocktails as Manhattan, Martini, Gibson, etc., etc., are most pleasing to them. While many of the fair sex follow closely with the men folks in this regard, there are many others who prefer the richer preparations, such as those containing portions of egg, much cordial or syrup. Again, when men only are to be served, decrease slightly the amount of sugar syrup called for, or increase the lemon content slightly. Recipes are prepared for the average taste and the amount of these ingredients depends upon the individual taste.

Beverages to which egg is added are generally termed as follows: where white only is used—Silver; where yolk only is used—Golden; and where both are used—Royal. In continental Europe, however, where a beverage contains absinthe, it is termed Royal.

Use bitters, cordials, syrups, etc., with the greatest caution. A little too much entirely alters the character of a beverage and, in many instances, spoils rather than improves it.

Grate nutmeg, or other spice, over the individual beverage, only after ascertaining the pleasure of the guest to be served.

When drawing a cork, or removing a cap, from a bottle containing champagne, ginger ale or effervescent water or soda, hold the bottle in a slanting position, to a point where the surface of the contents is just below the mouth of the bottle. Retain the bottle in this position for a few moments after opening and no loss of contents can occur.

Necessary accessories for the home mixer should include: Shaker (metal); stirring glass (10-ounce heavy tumbler); strainer (for use in shaker or stirring glass); pony and jigger (one and two ounce measures); bar spoons (for stirring and measuring); ice shaver and pick and lemon squeezer.

A cellarette, from which a great many of the recipes contained herein may be prepared, should contain: Gin, whisky, brandy, sherry, curacao, French and Italian vermouth, angostura and orange bitters, grenadine and sugar syrup.

Just because a particular recipe calls for an ingredient not possessed by the home mixer, he should not become discouraged. He should remember that many of the finest beverages have been discovered by the substitution of one syrup or cordial for another, the addition of a further ingredient and, in some instances, the omission of an ingredient.

To sum all in a few words, use the head, proceed along sane lines, mix a few of the "What-have-you" variety, and the knack of knowing how, and when, will come, along with much experience. Gesundheit.

Cocktails

Cocktails, America's own, and preeminently, her favorite beverage, are prepared either shaken with ice, or stirred with ice, strained into chilled or frosted cocktail glasses (2 ounce), a cherry or some other dainty added, and served.

To chill a glass, place therein a lump of ice the size of a walnut and, with a rotating motion, slide the glass so that the ice takes on a spinning motion. When sufficiently cool, toss out the ice and excess water, strain in the beverage and serve.

To frost a glass, first chill it. Then wet the inside rim with a small piece of lemon, dip into powdered sugar and toss out the excess. Strain in the beverage, decorate and serve. (This method is used only for "fancies" or the more elaborate cocktails.)

In the realm of cocktails the infinite variety is limited only by the ingenuity of the master of ceremonies or host. The slightest substitution of a cordial, bitter, flavor, etc., etc., in its preparation, oftentimes produces a new and entirely delightful beverage. Some of the most famous cocktails have been brought to light in this manner.

The judicious use of egg, white, yolk or both, and of cream, in the compounding of these delicious beverages, again has opened the field to a still wider choice for the connoisseur. Their use, however, is advised only with caution, as many otherwise fine beverages may prove disappointing with these added.

As a general rule most gentlemen, and more than a few of the fairer sex, prefer their cocktails "dry" or plain. Such are Manhattan, Martini, Gibson and many other famous drinks. However, there are many exceptions to this rule, so that the popular host would do well to be prepared to serve any one of a dozen or more of the best-liked varieties, plain and fancy.

It has been the effort of the publisher to present all recipes, including varieties, in order that the widest latitude of choice might be possible.

Highballs

Highballs, together with other beverages similar in form, come second only to cocktails in importance to the connoisseur. They are, in fact, merely "extended" cocktails—i. e., the first half prepared in the same manner and the second half made up of any one of a dozen or more "fillers" such as Ginger Ale, Seltzer, White Rock, Lime Rickey, etc., etc. This class of beverage should be served in the Highball glass (6-ounce), Short Highball (4-ounce) or Tall Highball (8-ounce). Each recipe will specify the proper glass to be used.

Highballs, even more so than Cocktails, provide the ingenious mixer with room for imagination. Here he or she not only has a choice of the many Liqueurs, Cordials, Bitters, etc., but also the further choice of a proper filler. Many pleasant surprises are in store for the experimenter.

As with Cocktails the publisher has endeavored to cover the entire field so that the choice of the host shall be from the widest range of beverages, but in all instances specifying only the filler called for in the original recipe.

Fizzes

Fizzes are the favorite beverage of many enthusiasts. Plain, they contain neither egg nor cream. With white of egg added, they become "Silver"; with yolk, "Golden"; with both, "Royal," and with cream, they are termed "Cream."

Pleasing and surprising variations of the many recipes given herein may be obtained by application of the above. Other equally pleasing and different beverages result by adding to a given recipe a dash of cordial or syrup, such as Benedictine, Cointreau, Absinthe, Curacao, etc., etc.

Plain Fizzes are recommended by many as "eye openers" for the "morning after the night before."

They may be served either in goblets or low-base tumblers (10 ounce).

Juleps

This popular beverage was invented in the Sunny Southland. It is a Punch or Cooler in character, but, since its origination, has become so popular it now deserves a classification of its own.

A properly prepared Julep will have the glass well "frosted". To accomplish this, fill the glass with shaved ice and stir slowly until the frost appears upon the outside surface. Then drain out the excess water, refill with shaved ice and prepare the beverage. "Frosting" may be hastened by wrapping the glass in a clean, dry dish towel.

Mint sprigs are the characteristic ingredient of this beverage. They may be crushed or not crushed. Most recipes call for bruising the mint, but as many connoisseurs prefer it not crushed, the preference of the guests may well be sought before preparing. Under either method new mint should be imbedded in the ice at frequent intervals and a Maraschino or green cherry, together with flakes of orange, added for decoration. Straws should be served. Glasses should be the low-base (10 ounce) tumbler, with flared rim (Julep glass).

BRANDY JULEP

Rickeys

Rickeys are close akin to Sours in nature, but contain a minimum of sweetening. The original, Lime Rickey, was prepared by crushing half a lime and adding the other ingredients, but since that time many recipes have come to light where lime or lemon juice is used.

All Rickeys are characterized by a predominance of lemon or lime. However, sugar syrup should always be used, to suit the taste, at least to the point where this delicious beverage would not lose its individuality.

Service should be in rickey glasses (6 ounce, low-base, flared rim). However, a 6-ounce highball glass may be used.

Hot Beverages

TODDIES, PUNCHES, ETC.

Hot beverages are particularly well adapted to cold, wintry weather, to prevent cold, by restoring bodily temperature after becoming damp, to induce sleep and for persons threatened with chill, etc. They cover a wide range, but a few general suggestions will not come amiss.

Water or milk, where called for, should be at the point of boiling. Protect glassware with a silver spoon. Most hot beverages are heavily spiced, but this is largely at the discretion of the mixer.

Tall highball glasses (8 ounce) are proper for serving, except where otherwise noted.

Many connoisseurs prefer the use of strained honey, instead of sugar, in hot beverages.
