Beyond Pumpkin Spice: Five Other Fall Flavors

Pumpkin spice is awesome and for a brief time, every year the market is full of foods and drinks celebrating it in all its glory. Some love it so much they've created pumpkin spice chips, dog treats, and soap. However, while everyone is drinking their pumpkin spice latte, or PSL, and eating treats full of pumpkin pie spice goodness, there are other quintessentially fall flavors that sit uneaten in the supermarket aisles.

What flavors are also great for the autumn?

APPLE CINNAMON

There was a time that apple alone was the flavor of the fall. Especially in the American northeast, the common fall family event before pumpkin picking was apple picking. Apples were synonymous with going back to school and the leaves changing colors. However, with the rise of pumpkin spice, treat enthusiasts are looking for more complex flavor profiles to enjoy.

Apple Cinnamon is perfect for fall treats. Apple cinnamon might not be great for the coffee house latte treat, but the time is always right for a nice hot cup of apple cider. It hits the sweet spot for everyone and there are no endless amount of stuffing, dressing, and casserole recipes combining apples, cinnamon, and something else to make a delicious treat.

One great way to mix together the fall flavor into a wonderful lunch time meal is to use apples and cinnamon to put a new twist on Waldorf salad. Simply swap out the grapes of the traditional recipe for a cup of cubed cooked chicken breast and add in a ½ teaspoon of cinnamon and enjoy an autumn chicken salad.

CRANBERRY

Cranberry is the silent hero of Thanksgiving. It's tart and cuts through the cream, meat, and carb filled Thanksgiving meals. However, cranberry doesn't quite get its full celebration. Many people are already happy with just using the canned cranberry sauce, when there are so many wonderful cranberry sauce recipes. Cranberry pairs well with almost any other fruit or vegetable and an inventive cook can use cranberry in many recipes for a unique twist.

Cranberries taste great with chocolate. Cranberry and chocolate chip cookies are a delicacy that few people have tried. Let's not forget all the different cocktails that feature cranberry juice.

One way to dress up a nice fall meal would be to add jellied cranberry sauce to a typical turkey meatball recipe. This offers a brand-new way to enjoy meatballs and ground turkey. For those who prefer meatloaf, cranberry makes a great add-in for turkey meatloaf. Pair that with stuffing and green beans and you have a quick easy meal that everyone can enjoy.

PEAR

Fresh pears saturate the market between October and November and are delicious treats for anyone, especially raw. The great thing about pears is they are so versatile. Mixed with any other fall flavor, pears will enhance your favorite fall recipes.

What's so great about pears? There are so many different varieties. Anjou pears, both red and green, are deliciously soft and sweet. Bosc pears are moderately sweet but crisp, which makes them perfect for cooking to reduce the heat in a spicy and savory recipe. Seckel pears are also crispy with a slight sweetness that works well in alcoholic drinks. These pears are simply scratching the surface. There are so many more that will provide variety to fall drinks and foods.

A great quick meal idea is to combine steak, pear, and arugula on a grilled pizza using Gorgonzola cheese. To keep it quick and easy used a prebaked pizza crust. Sprinkle the pizza with salt and pepper to taste and glaze it with a mixture of olive oil and balsamic vinegar. It is a perfect treat for a cool autumn evening.

MAPLE

If you're from the American northeast, maple candy was one of the best parts of the changing leaves. Maple doesn't have to remain a topper for your pancakes. There are so many treats that could use the great taste of maple.

Pumpkin pie spice doughnuts might be amazing, but a pumpkin pie spice doughnut with maple-flavored icing is a taste of heaven. For those that can't wait until the pumpkin spice latte makes its annual debut, a maple latte might be a welcome addition.

Could a maple syrup latte be the next pumpkin spice latte (PSL)?

The greatest thing about maple is how well it pairs with meat. Maple glazed ham and bacon are regular staples in a lot of home. Maple also works great as a glaze with mustard for salmon. You could easily swap the maple flavoring in any treat that's available with pumpkin spice and be just as pleased.

POMEGRANATES

The pomegranate is a difficult fruit to handle, due to the over 600 juicy seeds on the inside. There are multiple methods on how to retrieve them, but the best method is to buy a container of prepared seeds from your local grocery store.

Starting in September pomegranates are plentiful, making pomegranate a wonderful unique and unexpected fall flavor

One great way to use pomegranate with another overlooked fall flavor is in a cranberry sauce. Pomegranates work very well with cranberries and will vastly liven up a plain cranberry sauce. It also would taste great as a hard candy and makes an excellent addition to more adult targeted candy treats.

Overall, there are so many uniquely fall fruits and vegetables out there looking for incorporation into your favorite treats. If these five don't satisfy your craving for new and interesting fall flavors, look at produce like quince, mushrooms, sage, sweet potatoes and Brussels sprouts to incorporate into unique treats as you gaze at a landscape transformed into a painting by the changing leaves.

Pumpkin Pancakes? 7-Ways-to-Incorporate-Fruits- and-Veggies-into-Pancakes

Pancakes are easily one of the most popular breakfast foods, but they aren't all that healthy. Since pancakes contain only simple carbohydrates, they won't keep you full for long, and the lack of nutrients may leave you feeling tired and groggy. And let's not forget that most people prefer their pancakes slathered in syrup, which offers no nutritional value. While an unhealthy breakfast is fine now and then, it's best to enjoy a nutritionally-rich meal every morning. This article offers seven ways to incorporate fruits and vegetables into pancakes, so you can enjoy your favorite breakfast food in a healthier way.

Pumpkin Pancakes – Pumpkin-flavored everything is fast becoming popular in the health food world. Add some pumpkin to your pancakes for a heart-healthy, immune-boosting twist. These are especially festive in autumn.

Carrot Cake Pancakes – If you think you can't have dessert for breakfast, try a breakfasty twist on this favorite cake. Not only are carrot cake pancakes delicious, but it's also a great way to incorporate some veggies into your breakfast. Carrots are good for your eyes and they're a great source of beta-carotene.

Butternut squash Pancakes – Similar to pumpkin pancakes in taste and texture, squash pancakes will provide you with a myriad of vitamins and minerals. Butternut squash also supports a healthy metabolism and helps the immune system.

Zucchini pancakes – Zucchini is a mild vegetable with a taste that is easily disguised, while at the same time boasting endless health benefits. It is high in potassium, vitamins, and antioxidants. If you don't like the taste of zucchini or the sight of little green flecks in your pancakes, disguise your pancakes with a few tablespoons of cocoa powder for a delicious, dessert-like breakfast.

Banana pancakes – Any fan of banana bread will love banana pancakes, slathered with butter. Bananas contain potassium for a healthy heart, and they're also a natural source of energy to fuel you through your day.

Blueberry pancakes – Blueberry pancakes have long been a classic breakfast choice, but adding blueberries to your pancakes also adds a healthy twist. Blueberries are full of antioxidants and memory-boosting chemicals, and they are thought to ward off dementia.

Coconut Pineapple pancakes – In the Hawaiian mood? Some unsweetened, shredded coconut and some fresh or frozen pineapple can add a healthy and tropical twist to your breakfast. Coconut provides healthy fats and fiber, while pineapple is high in thiamine, a vitamin that helps produce energy, as well as other vitamins.

Don't worry if the suggestions above don't appeal to you. The list of fruits and vegetables that can be mixed into pancakes is inexhaustible. Keep experimenting with add-ins until you've found your favorite, and then sit down to enjoy a healthier version of your favorite breakfast.

Don't forget we have all of your Fall & Halloween needs from décor to costumes!!

Fear In The Woods

Open Weekends Sept 29 through Oct 29 and Halloween night!

Fridays and Saturdays 7pm to Midnight

Sundays 7pm to 11pm

Tuesday, October 31st 7pm to Midnight

The Farmer's crazy Uncle Eddie has escaped and is preparing the fields to scare trespassers at night. The woods will once again become alive September 29th, when the sun sets over The Pumpkin Patch. Uncle Eddie has brought Pandemic to the farm and we need your help to keep it contained. Are your skills good enough to save yourself and those around you? Don't wander to far from the light as he has invited new creatures to come feast on the screams of those that come to the farm after dark. Visit if you dare, and remember... only the woods will hear you scream.

Please note that Friday and Saturday nights are our busiest nights. Our highest volume nights are the last two weekends in October. Please plan ahead.

Fear the Woods is located at Yule Forest!

Why Do We Go Trick or Treating?

Whether you welcome trick or treaters on October 31, or lock the door and turn off all the lights, you may be wondering how the custom originated. And if you stock up on candy every October, you aren't alone – after Easter, Halloween is the holiday during which the most candy is bought and consumed, about $2 billion worth each year.

Some form of trick or treating has been around for longer than you might think; children in ancient Greece were fond of dressing as birds or animals and demanding money and food from houses, although the custom had little to do with Halloween. The concept of Halloween as we know it today has its roots in the Celtic holiday of Samhain, about 2,000 years ago in what is now the United Kingdom. It was believed the dead returned to the world and could only be appeased with offerings of food and drink.

Trick or treating as practiced today, and the other trappings of Halloween, evolved over time from this celebration. The practice of calling at houses, asking for a treat or threatening consequences was known as mumming in 15th and 16th century Scotland. Adults joined in the fun too; in areas of Wales, men dressed up pretending to be the dead returning to life to ask for food and to generally be mischievous.

During the 16th century, Catholics in England visited homes asking for soul cakes, in exchange for praying for the souls of the dead. This custom was practiced in parts of Europe too, and was even referred to by Shakespeare in one of his plays, Two Gentlemen of Verona. Some variation of this continued in Britain throughout the 18th and 19th centuries, and waves of immigrants to America brought some of the traditions with them.

In the United States, trick or treating has been common since the 1920s, and today is one of the highlights of Halloween. The term trick or treat was first mentioned in a Canadian newspaper in 1927, and during the 1920s Halloween postcards were produced showing children playing tricks. Kids were depicted as trick or treating on television and radio programs during the 1940s, and the custom became more widespread.

A more organized form of trick or treating, known as trunk or treating is practiced today by many community groups, schools and churches. Many parents see it as being safer for their kids than walking the neighborhood streets in the dark, and many churches see it as a way of reaching out to the community, and perhaps attracting newcomers.

There are plenty of variations on trick or treating in North America and Europe. In parts of Canada, children ask for Halloween apples instead of candy, and in Portugal children carry carved jack-o-lanterns and smear ashes on their faces. In Italy, households prepare a feast for those who have departed, and in Germany all the knives in the house are hidden away to prevent the dead from using them.

Children all over the world still enjoy the custom of dressing up and asking for treats, and many adults seem to enjoy it just as much. It's easy to see trick or treating, regardless of its pagan roots, is really just good fun.

NOW SCHEDULING RHYTHM WORKS INTEGRATIVE DANCE CLASSES

A Clinically Based Hip Hop Dance Program reimagined for the purpose of supplementing existing therapy/IEP goals, as well as providing a pathway to integrate kids with individual learning differences into inclusive dance classes.

- Utilizes sensory processing, kinesiology, and behavioral analysis
- Customizable
- Certified Teachers: Carla Gillespie Berry, A'Leah Burrell and Jessica Weaver
- Builds social, emotional, cognitive, and motor skills. Plus, it's tons of fun!

Rhythm Works Integrative Dance goes well beyond the art of dance. Emerging studies are starting to show that both sound and rhythm have great effects on the brain. Over the next few years, we hope to be able to show that by adding purposeful movement to specific music and rhythms, new neuropathways are created to override under or over-functioning pathways, helping kids to better organize their brains and self-regulate.
