Betsy M. Cowles

Betsy M. Cowles was one of the earliest and most notable female superintendents in the State of Ohio. She was known for her contributions to education, abolitionism and women's rights in Ohio. She counted among her friends and acquaintances people such as Frederick Douglass, William Lloyd Garrison, Henry C. Wright and Abby Kelley Foster.

Ms. Cowles was a risk taker and stood for what she believed. She spoke out against the Black Laws which kept African Americans from voting in Ohio. She actually quit her teaching job when the school she was working for at the time refused to admit black students.

In the 1820's into the early 1830's she opened infant schools in northeastern Ohio which were a predecessor to the modern day kindergartens. She earned her teaching degree from Oberlin College in the 1840's in the third female class to graduate. She taught in grammar schools, in addition to serving as principal and as superintendent of the Painesville Township Local Schools from 1858-1860. She also served as superintendent of the girl's grammar school and girl's high school in Canton, Ohio from 1850-1855.

This award will be given annually to a woman who exemplifies outstanding administrative leadership.
