FREE TO LEARN

How Student-driven Learning Environments Impact Student Outcomes

BY PRAKASH NAIR

It's a surprising fact that the top universities in the world actively recruit home-schooled students for their freshman class. The reason they do so is because these students have primarily been free to study what interests them most, and have "learned how to learn" while doing so. (Business Insider, Chris Weller, 2015) While standardised tests are too often the criteria upon which education outcomes are measured, acceptance into top post-secondary institutions is another good way to measure student outcomes for secondary schools. This criterion is an accurate gauge about the effectiveness of schooling. It goes beyond celebrating test-taking skills by also demonstrating the real-world value of student-directed learning.

My clients include a wide range of school communities around the globe, from renowned IB (International Baccalaureate) schools to charter schools that serve challenged neighbourhoods. Despite their striking differences, they tend to have one thing in common; they agree that engaged students are motivated students and that engagement comes from involvement in activities that are of personal interest to them. In this sense, learning is really a by-product of passion for a subject. Yet the traditional school setup is single-mindedly focused on the imparting of disjointed information in a variety of subjects. At the physical level, this philosophy is represented by rows upon rows of identical classrooms where direct instruction is the dominant form of teaching. This system – both the hardware and software of education – is almost perfectly designed to snuff out a student's natural curiosity and constrain learning to homogenous input and output. Perhaps a dubious benefit of this system is that in its complete failure to inspire, it motivates budding entrepreneurs to check out emotionally, and often physically, from school and invent things in their garages instead.

So, how can schools support student-driven learning and create the kind of lifelong learners that society needs?

How can they be even better than the homeschool environment? The answer is to provide amenity-rich settings for learning that foster exploration, and Learning Communities that are the right size to support the emotional needs of learners.

“While typical classroom-based schools are designed to produce people with a uniform knowledge and skill set, student-driven learning spaces are designed to support individuals with varied needs, interests and talents.”

Rather than double-loaded corridors with classrooms the same size, Learning Communities contain a variety of spaces and amenities, and serve 100 - 150 students. A variety of room sizes with permeable boundaries supports learning beyond the lecture mode, enabling multiple space formations that are acoustically separate when needed. Teachers don't "own" any of these learning spaces, but share their professional office, using it for planning and assessment. Learning Communities also typically include learning studios for large group work, a commons area, small group rooms, and creative "DaVinci studios" for hands-on work and experimentation, all with a variety of flexible furnishings. These might include soft seating for comfortable reading, tall seating with tech bars, adjustable tables with ergonomic seating for group collaboration, and whiteboards for brainstorming sessions. Students and teachers can then select the proper space and furnishing arrangement for their learning cycle as it changes throughout the day.

The beauty of the Learning Community model is that it can be used by institutions of any size, from a small charter school to a large public high school, since the scale of the school is broken down so students always feel they are part of an intimate community of peers and adults.

PK Yonge Developmental Research School in Gainesville, Florida

Case Study: International School of Brussels

ISB commons

Many International Baccalaureate schools are starting to use this model, often doing affinity subject groupings that share amenities and spaces. The International School of Brussels is an English-language international PreK-12 school that educates 1,500 students from 62 countries. Their high school is organized into learning communities by curriculum themes, and individualized programs are developed by each student.

Beyond the rigours of the IB programming, students are encouraged as well-rounded individuals to follow their interests in the arts, performance, and music studies. Like homeschoolers, ISB students are actively recruited by top universities around the world, including École Polytechnique Fédérale de Lausanne; Erasmus University Rotterdam; Hong Kong University for Science and Technology; Johns Hopkins University; King's College, London; Marquette University and New York University.

Case Study: Venture Academy, Minneapolis

In sharp contrast to ISB, Venture Academy is a charter middle and high school serving students who have not had success in the local public-school system. With 90% of the student body living in poverty, many Venture Trailblazers are three to four grade levels behind their peers when they start at the school. Personal learning dashboards allow students to pursue their own interests while learning, and keep track of their progress. This software was designed by Facebook programmers, and Venture is the single user in Minnesota. But the dashboards aren't the only unique feature of the school. Venture encourages students to pursue areas of passion through experiential enrichment classes like robotics, web development, music in digital media, visual arts, and physical education. Varied spaces in the school allow for amenities like maker spaces, 3D printers, and programming labs.

At Venture, the Learning Community model provides more than a place for exploration; it creates a safe and encouraging environment for young people with challenging life situations. One exciting sign of success came in March 2016 when a team of four middle school Trailblazers beat out ten adult teams at a Start-up Accelerator design competition in Minneapolis.

Venture Maker Lab

While case studies like these demonstrate the positive effect of student-driven learning spaces, there is also hard data that supports their impact. For example, in a 2011 study published by the American Educational Research Journal, entitled "Problem-Based Learning in K-12 Education," Clarice Wirkala and Deanna Kuhn document a 200% - 500% improvement in learning retention with authentically student-driven, enquiry-based learning. More proof that schools should be places students can't wait to get to every morning, where they are eager to explore and master the things that matter the most to them.

FUTURE FOCUSED LEARNING™ ZONES

Learning has evolved... Has your classroom?

What Are Future Focused Learning™ Zones?

CULTURE ZONES

Culture Zones provide a place for students to appreciate and immerse themselves in experiences such as art, music, history and religion. They facilitate a widening of the learners' awareness of the world around them.

Culture Zones can be created by teaming together diverse furniture pieces, including tiered seating for viewing presentations and soft seating combined with vibrant colours to engage and excite.

COMMUNICATE ZONES

Communication skills are more important than ever, providing the means by which information can be presented. Fostering open discussion and debate in a non-judgemental environment allows communication skills to flourish.

Furniture plays an important role in creating zones where communication can flow freely and effectively. Communicate Zones can be a small intimate space or a large auditorium, often containing a variety of comfortable seating, agile desks and whiteboards.

COLLABORATE ZONES

Student collaboration is an integral part of any Future Focused Learning™ environment. Students learn that collaboration through teamwork broadens perspectives whilst encouraging innovation.

Effective Collaborate Zones benefit from furniture that allows students to engage in discussion, as well as plan and share ideas. Agile desking that allows a variety of group work configurations, and booths combined with meeting tables work well in these areas.

CREATE ZONES

Create Zones provide the avenue for student expression. Creating can provide purpose and the opportunity to express creativity can affect other key areas of learning.

Create Zones benefit from a diverse range of vibrant coloured furniture that can be mixed and matched. Whiteboard top student tables, ottomans and agile desks combine with smart storage solutions to ensure creative tools are close to hand.

CONNECT ZONES

Connectivity allows students to impact a larger audience and places them in touch with the real world. Providing zones where students can explore and connect effectively and respectfully is vital; whether it is peer-to-peer in the classroom or in an online environment.

Furniture that allows seamless technology integration within the classroom is an essential element of these learning zones. Clever use of tech desks, interactive whiteboards and soft seating will motivate and engage.

CRITICAL ZONES

The ability to think critically gives students a means to effectively process and manage information. This life-long skill allows students to solve real world problems and ask 'why?' The ability to filter and analyse are essential future focused skills.

Critical Zones provide space for students to engage in higher order thinking. Soft colours and agile furniture pieces that can be brought together in groups or separated for individual work, facilitate reflective thinking and problem solving activities.

A SYMPHONY OF LEARNING

Create a symphony of learning with the Maestro Culture Zone. Music in education fosters language development and enriches student life with new perspectives, sensations and experiences. The Maestro Culture Zone provides a fun and stimulating space for music classes to be conducted on new levels.

Multi-leveled seating also allows students to choose where to sit so they can see and be heard better. Students can also choose to sit on ground level in the Alberi Visitor Chairs and play their instruments whilst reading sheet music on the Adjustable Music Stands.

FLEXIBLE & FLUID

Culture Zones embrace community and mutual collaboration by teaming together diverse furniture pieces to create fluid spaces. Flow Culture Zone allows students to be swept into the natural ebb and flow of working together.

Comfortable and practical, modular seating effectively breaks up large spaces and creates an ideal environment for flexible learning. This is achieved with Cirkus Mobile Lounges and Sideshow Mobile Ottomans arranged in a free form wave configuration.

Students can either sink into one of BFX's Bean Chairs specifically designed for comfort with a laptop, or brainstorm on the whiteboard surface of the SmarTable™ Jotters. Large scale zones such as this give students the freedom to either spread out or come together to create a learning community.

SKYRISE Culture Zone

HEALTHY & PRODUCTIVE

Create a classroom culture that promotes healthy bodies and productive minds. Skyrise Culture Zone aims to improve student's physical health by giving them the flexibility of working in either a seated or standing position.

As students reach adolescence they become less physically active during their school day. Learning environments that get students up and moving result in positive health benefits like burning calories, lower blood pressure and increased blood flow throughout the body.

Students can either get comfortable on the stylish Samba Lounge Chair with their laptops resting on the Skyward Height Adjustable Table or they can adjust the table height and work standing up.

Skyrise Culture Zone is perfect for students requiring a quiet and supportive space for independent study and assignment work.

NETWORKING COMMUNITY

Network Culture Zone promotes an inclusive culture of socialisation and collaboration in large learning spaces. Fostering a networking culture is a great way for students to get a head-start on building meaningful relationships with their peers, teachers or professors, leading to beneficial business contacts in their future careers.

Network allows multiple students to sit around the outer curve on bar stools and work on a laptop. While the shelving compartments are ideal for them to store their bags or books in a library setting. Network promotes flexibility of design and convenience with adaptable fixtures along the outer curve. Extend the shelving compartments all the way around or extend the counter height tables for even more work space.

About BFX

History

BFX is a highly regarded and well recognised 2nd generation company in Australia. BFX origins date back to 1980 when the founding family established in retail office furniture, developed their own manufacturing facility. Since then, BFX has grown to become one of the leading manufacturers, designers and suppliers of education, corporate, government and healthcare furniture in Australia and New Zealand.

With a highly dedicated and experienced team, BFX delivers education furniture, design and logistic services throughout Australia, exporting to Japan and New Zealand and continues to grow. In late 2014 BFX opened a newly constructed 15,000 square metre warehousing facility, combined with our current manufacturing locations. This represents the continuation of growth; an integral principle of the company.
