Incineration vs. Reuse

Incineration

Incineration is burning with ash remaining. It is not vaporization with nothing remaining.

Incineration is waste. Ash will get reused or landfilled.

The process of burning creates emissions from both the fuel used and the waste burned.

Customer identification remains all the way through the process to the ash.

Reuse

Reuse is use more than once.

Reuse is not waste.

Reuse saves resources, including the container used to ship it.

Customer identification is lost (in most cases) once the product is received and sorted.

Incineration vs. Reuse

According to the EPA's non-hazardous materials and waste management hierarchy, reuse is preferred over energy recovery.

The hierarchy places emphasis on reducing, reusing, and recycling as key to sustainable materials management.

NATURAL MATS

Sorblts[®]

A person wearing a high-visibility green safety vest and dark clothing is holding a large, blue, quilted pad. The pad is being held vertically, showing its diamond-shaped quilted pattern. The background is an industrial setting with blue metal frames and machinery. A yellow tool is visible in the upper left corner. The floor is concrete, and another piece of the quilted pad is laid out on the ground.

QUILTED PADS
