Returned Items

Any product that has been ordered and is in sound condition may be returned within the A.B.C. regulated time period of two weeks. All returned items are subject to a restocking fee.

Delivery will be C.O.D until a signed and completed credit application has been processed. Net 30 days on approved credit only. A service charge of 1.5% per month will be assessed at 43 days and every 30 days thereafter. Shipments to past-due accounts will be C.O.D. only, per A.B.C. regulations.

A Visit to...

FROG'S LEAP

BY PETER NEPTUNE, MS, AIWS, CWE, FWS

Senior Vice President, Corporate Training & Wine Education for The Henry Wine Group

The Henry Wine Group began representing Frog's Leap Winery on July 1st of this year. This news brought me a great deal of joy, as I have secretly coveted (I know, a deadly sin) this particular brand for some time. I liked the wines (a lot), I knew they were organically farmed (important to me) and I just thought that the label was super cool and that there had to be something behind it (boy is that true). So, I looked at my schedule and cleared a couple of days and made my way to the Rutherford AVA of Napa Valley at the end of July.

I drove down the Silverado Trail to Conn Creek Road, hung a right, and looked for the big Red Barn. There it was, and I was at the winery. This iconic old barn was renovated and then purchased by Frog's Leap in 1995.

At this point I should introduce the cast of the story. Enter a young John Williams, fresh to the Napa Valley from upstate New York. He meets one Larry Turley. Larry helps John get a job working for Warren Winiarski at Stag's Leap Wine Cellars. John has a hand in bottling the '73 Cabernet which wins the 1976 Paris tasting. One night, after being overserved, John and Larry agree to create a winery together, using Larry's property, and old frog farm, as its base, and decide on the name Frog's Leap.

I was met at the winery by Kristy Byrd, the California Sales Manager, and Michelle Williams, the Sales Manager. We relaxed on the deck of the tasting room, a beautiful spot overlooking the orchards and gardens of the property, with vines stretching out in the distance. All organically farmed, of course. We quaffed the current releases (tasting notes later) and marveled at our good fortune, to be alive and here and able to take in such a lovely place on such a lovely day.

We walked the property and poked our head into the Red Barn, which has been lovingly restored to its proper iconic majesty. I knew that the property was organically farmed (CCOF in 1989), but I did not know that all of the vineyards that produce Frog's Leap wines are Dry Farmed as well. Dry Farmed? In the Napa Valley?

John gets his degree in Oenology at UC Davis in 1977. He returns to New York for a few years, then back to Napa, and finally, he and Larry release their first vintage of Frog's Leap Sauvignon Blanc in 1982. John begins fashioning Cabernet Sauvignon, Chardonnay, and Zinfandel.

By 1988 John had become convinced that organic farming will produce healthier vines, better grapes, and therefore finer wines. He enlists the aid of Bob Cantisano, who teaches John the protocols of organic and helps him convert his vineyard. Others in Napa Valley such as Andy Hoxey (Ghost Block) and Lee Hudson join in on the movement. A year later, after hiring Frank Leeds to oversee farming operations, the fruit from Frank's family vineyards in Rutherford become a valuable fruit source, and dry farming is introduced and followed in earnest.

This dry farming thing really intrigued me. The next day I joined John and his son Rory (no slouch in the viticulture/winemaking arena either) for a tour of the historic Rossi Vineyard (acquired in 2007) in the famed Rutherford Bench.

As we walked the vineyards we looked at the basis of dry farming – establishing healthy St. George vines to graft upon.

This is the way Napa Valley used to be farmed; until the mid-1970s when agribusiness and irrigation companies convinced growers that converting to drip irrigation would give them larger yields. The problem with this type of irrigation system, though, is that the vines' root system has no need to go deep into the soil to find water, as all of the water is at the surface. So, can there be such a notion as "Terroir" when this is the farming method? John thinks not. According to John, "Grapevines are living, sentient beings with their days and nights consumed by concern for vital life choices...vines make critical decisions each and every day. So how does a grapevine make these decisions? They do so by taking information from their environment." As we walked the vineyard, Rory pointed out how the tips of the tendrils on a vine have stopped reaching upwards. "This vine has decided that it has enough growth in terms of vegetation and it can now focus its energies on ripening its fruit." John goes on to say "But what happens so often in most vineyards? The vines are lined up, their branches forced into restrictive trellising and their growing tips are cut off. They are exposed to toxic pesticides and fed strong, synthetic fertilizers. They are forced to drink water when they are not thirsty. Birds are discouraged, insects are killed, and the oak tree is cut down. So much of modern farming is dedicated to removing the very information that these plants need to succeed. In this light our farming choices are not radical concepts but rather the very basics of what must be done to reunite a vine with its environment." The health of the vines and health of the soil bear this out. We dug a small distance into the dirt. Indeed, only 4 to 6 inches down I found soil that was rich in microbial life and earthworm population. A pound of this kind of healthy soil can hold 9 pounds of water!! Who needs irrigation when this can be achieved with some diligence and care?

In 1993, Larry Turley sold his share of the winery to the Williams family, and went on to some (!) success himself. The winery moves to the Red Barn property and begins replanting the phylloxera- ridden vines on the property and converting that vineyard to dry farming. In 1999 Frog's Leap releases its first "Rutherford" bottling.

In 2006, the new hospitality center and administrative offices are completed; the new "old" farmhouse is the first LEED (Silver) certified building in the California wine industry. The Rossi vineyard is bought a year later, and replanting and conversion to dry farming begins there. In 2013, Frank Leeds is named "Grower of the Year" by the Napa Valley Grap growers Association, and Rory Williams becomes vineyardist. A year later, the first vintage of Estate Grown and Bottled Rutherford Cabernet Sauvignon is released.

We end my visit at John and his wife Tori's house, the old Rossi estate, overlooking the stunning vines planted on the famed Rutherford Bench, with the Mayacamas Mountains in the near distance and the sun setting on a beautiful evening.

We open older vintages of Frog's Leap wines, such as 1997 Cabernet (rocking good) and 1986 Merlot alongside the same vintage of Ch.

Figeac St. Emilion (the Frog's Leap is deserving of the company). We dine on melons from the organic garden wrapped in prosciutto, and lamb chops from the grill. We toast to the past, present, and future.

So what do I take away from my visit to Frog's Leap Winery? Here are a few impressions: A man, a family, with a great passion for wine and dedication to doing what is right....a team at the hospitality center that takes that word, hospitality, at its face value and lives it. A general manager, Jonah Beer, who knows more about viticulture than any GM I have ever met at a winery. A sales team, Michelle and Kristy, who believe in their product with all of their hearts and therefore have a blast selling it. Happy, content vines planted on living, breathing soil. A clean environment and sustainability for the future. And in Rory's hands, a very bright future indeed.

Tasting notes on following page.

Current Vintage Tasting Notes:

2016 Sauvignon Blanc Rutherford District:

dry farmed, organically grown, fermented and aged in stainless. Aromas of just-picked grapefruit, peach blossom and lemon grass. Fresh and vibrant on the palate with a nice steak of mineral/wet stone on the finish. This is a crisp, pure Sauvignon that I could quaff all day long.

2015 Chardonnay Napa Valley:

dry farmed, organically grown, whole cluster pressed. Fermented in new oak barrels and then transferred to concrete. Has a wonderful palate feel with a fresh fruit character that is, well, darn refreshing. Apple, pear, and hint of nectarine. Just a hint of oak vanillin on the nose, super clean finish. Bravo.

2014 Merlot Rutherford District:

dry farmed, organically grown, the vines' roots go super deep into the soil bringing about intense, pure flavors and aromas of plummy fruit with silky texture. Older vintages of this wine bear out the fact that this is serious stuff with terrific aging potential.

2015 Zinfandel Napa Valley:

dry farmed, organically grown, with 20% Petite Sirah and 2% Carignan. Fashioned in the style of the classic Napa Zins of the 1940s, this is not your typical high alcohol (this is only 13.6%) version of the varietal. I learned that, when dry farmed, a zinfandel vine is in harmony with itself and ripens its berries evenly. Who knew this about such a notoriously uneven ripener? This has classic brambly fruit with wild raspberry and cherry and a fresh, ripe palate with incredible finesse and balance.

2014 Estate Cabernet Sauvignon Rutherford Napa Valley:

dry farmed, organically grown, with grapes from the Red Barn vineyard on the valley floor of the Rutherford District and the Rossi Vineyard in the Rutherford Bench, with 11% Cabernet Franc. This tastes of the famous "Rutherford Dust" in its purest form, with blackcurrant and blackberry framing a toasty, coffee bean quality. This is a beautiful expression of Cabernet at its purest with just enough oak but not too much. Older versions of this wine show very, very well.
